Terms of Reference For Establishment of Cyber Security Simulation and Research Lab

Introduction of Project:

Cyber Security or information technology Security is a field within information technology involving the protection of computer systems and the prevention of unauthorized use or changes or access of electronic data. It deals with the protection of software, hardware, networks and its information.

The technical facilities in the Cyber Security Research center are made available to promising cyber security innovation projects. Nepal Telecommunications Authority (NTA) intends to establish the Cyber Security Research center which takes up current challenges in cyber security using a combined approach that encompasses people, processes, organization and control.

Cyber Security Research center requires:

- i. Work environment for projects
- ii. Demonstration and meeting point
- iii. Basic cyber facilities for projects

This is where everything comes together: existing and new technologies, behavioral change, big data, processes and procedures, human competences, technology, software, and hardware. Only with an integrated, multidisciplinary approach one can really improve cyber security. Due to the heavy reliance on computers in the modern industry that store and transmit an abundance of confidential information about people, cyber security is a critical function and needed insurance of many businesses. It also protects computer systems and information from theft or damage.

Vulnerabilities in Cyber security system can come from many different factors. Most of these centers around any inherent faults within the system itself, how easy it would be for a cyber-attacker to break through any securities the system may have set up, and/or how easy it is for the cyber attacker to use the fault in the system to their advantage. One of the most common faults found in systems that can be abused by attackers is when a system is too complex. The more detailed a system becomes, the harder it is for cyber security to cover all the flaws. Thus, creates more opportunities for attacks to make their mark. Also, whenever user input is a variable, there can be ways into a system. This is because it is difficult for a programmer to predict and account for all possible inputs from a user. Attackers could affect the system depending on their inputs which would allow them to exploit the system further.

Computer simulations are of great importance in the field of cyber-security. Simulations are useful as components of network security software and in training exercises for security professionals, as well as software aids designed for network users. Moreover, much of the basic research in cyber-related human actors and cyber epidemiology benefits from simulation software. The dynamics of cyber-security are fundamentally human and adversarial, encompassing a range of attacker, defender, and user interactions. Simulations of human cognition and behavior are of importance for addressing these domain characteristics.

Network simulations that include high-fidelity models of users, attackers, and/or defenders may be employed for running war-game training scenarios with realistic traffic and user-generated vulnerabilities. Data collection and analysis from running these simulations provides the means to study how various changes in tools, security restrictions, and training can affect overall network security. Models of users' and defenders' cognition may be employed for real-time estimation of their cognitive states, to address human system integration challenges and identify tasks that would benefit from automation. Models of attackers' cognition may be employed in complement with behavioral game theory to predict subjective action utilities and optimal defensive action paths. Just as simulations in healthcare predict how an epidemic can spread and the ways in which it can be contained, such simulations may be used in the field of cyber security as a means of progress in the study of cyber-epidemiology.

Objective of Work:

The objective of the project from a cyber-security perspective should offer Simulation and Training services engineered for real life use cases or scenarios and identify any gaps in incident responses, procedures and security controls including skill gaps and prescribe learning paths through modules within the platform.

Purpose and Scope of Work:

The main purpose of project is to establish the Cyber Security Simulation and Research Lab in Nepal for Telecom sector in terms of different aspects including human resource, infrastructure, and administration. Considering cyber-security perspective, the platform should offer simulation and training services should strive for a safer, stronger internet for education and research community in Nepal. Cyber Security Simulation and Research Lab will be providing Cyber Research, Simulation and Training Platform.

The Cyber Research, Simulation and Training Platform must serve the following purposes:

- Should recognize patterns for security threats and compromise.
- Should recognize threats faster and practice responding to them properly.
- Should be able to simulate critical infrastructure components, including computer servers, telecom business applications (like OSS, BSS, VoIP, Software Call Manager, SIP Gateway) and clients.
- Should be able to simulate and conduct offensive operations to identify the weaknesses beyond the typical VAPT.

- Should be able to simulate and conduct defensive operations to protect critical infrastructure Components.
- Once the Cyber Research, Simulation and Training Platform is established in the premises of Nepal Telecommunications Authority, it should help prepare for red team skills and the blue team skills, while customizing the scenarios curated with the microcosm of telecom setups.
